

Professional Development Services

New Education for the Workplace (NEWCorp) and its associated programs provide numerous professional development programs including staff trainings, conferences, and online seminars.

Professional Development for NEWCorp Academic Program Staff

Staff at the Albuquerque Academic Program participate in subject-specific trainings, professional development through Job Corps, and Read 180 lessons. SIATech offers a BTSA Induction Program for instructors who seek to earn their clear credential while on-the-job.

NEWCorp Albuquerque staff are invited to attend a variety of other professional development programs that aim to improve instructional and leadership skills, especially to meet the needs of the at-promise student population, and help staff members renew their passion for teaching.

Additional Professional Development Services 4th Annual Reaching At-Promise Students National Conference

Since 2005, the Reaching At-Promise Students National Conference has provided hands-on strategies and practical applications that can be immediately implemented into the classroom. The focus of the conference is on helping ALL students succeed. NEWCorp serves a student population comprised entirely of previous dropouts who all qualify for free- or reduced lunches. Therefore, meeting the needs of struggling students is critical, and this event offers expert hands-on strategies in all core subject areas specifically designed for addressing the needs of the at-promise population. Reaching At-Promise Students Association (RAPSA)

The mission of the Reaching At-Promise Students Association (RAPSA) is to be the leading resource for professionals working with at-promise learners. RAPSA provides opportunities in professional development for elementary and secondary teachers, administrators, counselors, and others working with the high-risk population. Through workshops, trainings, and conferences, RAPSA shares innovative, standards-aligned assignments and methodologies for immediate classroom use. RAPSA promotes the capabilities and accomplishments of at-promise students by working in collaboration with local businesses and developing valuable networking opportunities. Learn more here.
